Capital Credits

Glades Electric Cooperative is owned by you, our members. Yes, you are actually part owner of an electric cooperative - just like stockholders who own Duke Energy or Florida Power & Light. However, GEC doesn't issue stock shares like an investor owned utility. We have Capital Credits. Stock shares are used to determine what portion of a corporation each shareholder owns. Capital Credits are used for the same purpose in a cooperative. However, federal law states that unlike stock shares, Capital Credits may not be sold or cashed.

Your Capital Credits are used to sustain the business of the cooperative. They are used to build new lines, to pay wholesale power bills and to generally keep a positive cash flow at the co-op. This program prevents the co-op from having to borrow money to do business and thus increase the debt load. The members' Capital Credits actually enhance the co-op's ability to hold down electric rates.

A member may ask, "If the co-op is doing all that with my Capital Credits what good are they to me?" That seems to be the hardest question to answer for the consumer owners, but, at the end each year, after all operating expenses have been paid, a prorated percentage of its margins is allocated to the member-owners based on the amount each paid for electricity during the year. This allocation of margins is known as Capital Credits.

Another question may be, "When are Capital Credits refunded?" Every year your Board of Trustees determines how much of those annual margins will be needed to run the business in the coming year. The amount not needed to pay down the required debt or to pay for required new construction of system restoration projects will be returned to each member in the form of "Retired Capital Credits". All monies retained in the business build your equity in the company.
